"THE APPLE CART"

Rabbi Maurice N. Eisendrath

We know of no play which so resolutely and so honestly comes to grips with the complex political problem of our time as does George Bernard Shaw's latest drama, "The Apple Cart" now touring Canada. It graphically and with searching clarity reveals the seeming breakdown of our proud democratic institutions under the contemporary "tyranny of popular ignorance and popular poverty." Through the lips of the leading character of the play Shaw trenchantly indicts democracy in words that are saddening but none the less true.

"Today, there is not a single aristocrat left in politics, not a single member of the professions, not a single leading personage in big business or finance. They are richer than ever, more powerful than ever, more able and better educated than ever. But not one of them will touch this drudgery of government, this public work that never ends, because we cannot finish one job without creating ten fresh ones. It wears out the strongest man in five or six years. And this drudgery, remember, is a sweated trade. Our salaries can be earned ten times over in the city by anyone with outstanding organizing or administrative ability. Our work is no longer even respected. It is looked down upon by our men of genius as dirty work. What great actor would exchange his stage? What great barrister his court? What great preacher his pulpit? for the squalor of the political arena in which we have to struggle with foolish factions in parliament and with ignorant voters in the constituencies? The scientists will have nothing to do with us, for the atmosphere of politics is not the atmosphere of science. All the talent and genius of the country is bought up by the flood of unearned money. On that poisoned wealth, talent and genius live far more luxuriously in the service of the rich than we in the service of our country. Politics, once the centre of attraction for ability, public spirit and ambition, has now become the refuge of a few fanciers of public speaking and party intrigue who find all the other avenues to distinction closed to them either by their lack of practical ability, their comparative poverty and lack of education."

And surely, no one acquainted with the corruption and crime, the greed and the graft which maintain in many democratic lands, particularly in the United States where democracy's sad debacle is most blatant, can deny the validity of this devastating charge.

Fortunately, Shaw himself recognizes that all the decadence that has crept over our modern democratic state is not really due to any shortcomings in the principles and philosophy of democracy itself, but rather in that mere pretence at democratic government which rules with such absolute power and sway in our modern plutocratic state. It is a moneyed autocracy which is the wolf that walks in the lamblike garment of democracy. In Shaw's play it is Breakages, Ltd., a mighty industrial monopoly "that monster with its millions and its newspapers and its fingers in every pie" with its selfish suppression of patents that might make for the common weal when they interfere with its private profits, with its interlocking directorates and its domination of every element in the political life of the nation; it is this sprawling commercial octopus that has "bought and swallowed" democracy in Shaw's challenging play. And even as a reality, it is similar combinations of big business and frenzied finance

THE BRITISH GOVERNMENT'S NEW ZIONIST POLICY

Indications continue to multiply that the British government is about to issue a statement completely reversing its Passfield policy and outlining a satisfactory attitude towards Zionism. Negotiations have been going on for some time between representatives of the British cabinet and of the Jewish Agency. Apparently the two parties have reached an agreement with respect to some phases of the situation, and the terms of settlement are about to be committed to a formal document. Further details pursuant to the new development are to be worked out by the spokesmen of the two sides, and if they are in line with the present conciliatory trend, the final product should prove satisfactory.

In some quarters the Passfield White Paper has been treated as the crystalization of an evolutionary development of inexorable British policy. Wise men rushed to print to rationalize about the ways of diplomatic relationships and have sought to prove that the doom of Zionism was deterministically foreordained. They facilely discounted the value of the protests and protestations of leading British statesmen favorable to Zionism, and chose to deal only with universal tendencies fashioned by the remorseless fabrics of international intrigue. The utterances of Passfield somehow appeared to be informed with the spirit of the demon of diplomatic realism. And when the prophets heard them, they fell on their faces and pronounced the doom of hapless Zionism.

Of course, the new statement of the British government will not solve all the difficulties of Zionism. True, it may clarify some of the phases of the situation which have been left in doubt by the Balfour Declaration and the Mandate. But it is impossible to expect cut-and-dried formulas. Statesmen and politicians have it not in them to think out fool-proof and accident-proof theories. At best political policies are a matter of expediency and living from hand to mouth. The farsighted programs, we read about, lying in pigeon-holes, diabolically worked out to meet all contingencies, are figments of the imagination. Politicians and statesmen are ordinary humans given to fumbling and stumbling, and liable to change their minds from day to day. They are no more impeccable than industrialists and financial leaders who operate opportunistically from hour to hour.

Well, for a while, owing to circumstances, it was Lord Passfield who had the say over the fate of Zionism. It was absurd, however, to think that Passfield's views were any more final and irrevocable than the utterances of a Balfour or a Lloyd George. It was only a matter of determination and perseverance on the part of the Jewish people. Hamans have come and gone, and the Jewish people are still here. Lord Passfield was as ephemeral as the other unfriendly forces that have dissolved before the Jewish will to continue.

The path of Zionism is thorny no. The achievement of a Jewish national entity will always be fraught with dangers and sacrifices. The national existence of all peoples is a process of struggle. Indeed, life generally, of individuals as well as of groups is a hard, bitter proposition. Perhaps the various souls who envisage the achievement of the Jewish goal in Palestine in terms of a Jewish academy there, a group of intellective gentlemen will read books and write treatises — the so-called culturalists — believe that Palestine could culture without the complications of the normal struggle. Zionism exists in this world of international intrigues, and Arabs, and nationalism, and fascism, it meets

Marriages

Bernstein-Bloomstone

The marriage was solemnized Tuesday evening, February 3, in the chapel of Shaar Hashomyim Synagogue, of Hazel Stella, only daughter of Harry Bloomstone and the late Mrs. Bloomstone, to Lewis Bernstein, son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Bernstein, of Portland, Maine. Rabbi Herman Abramowitz officiated. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore eggshell satin, her veil simply arranged, and she carried a prayer book. Her only ornament was a heart of pearls that had been worn by her mother. Mrs. Geller, aunt of the bride, was her only attendant. She was gowned in orchid and gold brocade, with hat and shoes to match. Philip Bornstein, brother-in-law of the groom, was best man, and the ushers were Sidney Davidson, Lew Vineberg, and Benjamin Silverman. During the signing of the register Mrs. Evelyn Benjamin sang "O Promise Me." A reception was held in the synagogue after the ceremony. The bride and groom left on an extended trip south, the bride travelling in a green tweed ensemble, with hat, shoes, and bag to match. Mr. and Mrs. Bernstein will live in Portland, Maine. The out-of-town guests for the ceremony were Mr. and Mrs. Max Vineberg, Ste. Agathe; Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Bernstein, Mr. and Mrs. Philip Bornstein, Nathan Silverman and his daughter, Mildred, Misses Sadie and Etta Bernstein, Miss Peggy Davidson, and Sidney Davidson, all of Portland, Maine.

Duchow-Marcus

The marriage of Bertha, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George Marcus, to Louis Duchow, son of Mr. and Mrs. John Duchow, was solemnized Sunday, February 8, at 5 p.m. at the Mount Royal Hotel. Rabbi Julius Berger officiated. Marvin Duchow, brother of the groom, played the wedding march and during the signing of the register, Miss Billie Spritzer sang "O Promise Me." The bride, who was given away by her father, wore a white satin gown made with a long train. Her veil of tulle with a border of lace, fell from a lace cap with clusters of orange blossoms on either side, and she carried a shower bouquet of tea roses and lilies of the valley. Miss Eva Wiener, was maid of honor, wearing flame color crepe gown, with a gold sequins cap and gold slippers and a bouquet of Talisman roses. John Katzman was best man. The bridesmaids were Misses Pauline Marcus, cousin of the bride, in eggshell satin; and Sadie Davis, in yellow chiffon. Their slippers matched their gowns, and they carried Talisman roses. The groomsmen were Is Shawll, and Irving Diamond. Mrs. Marcus, mother of the bride, wore a black lace and chiffon gown, with hat and shoes to match, Mrs. Duchow, mother of the groom, was in a black chiffon and metallic gown

Darwin-Litwin

The marriage of Riva, only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Litwin, Harwood Avenue, to Hirschel Harold Darwin, son of Mr. and Mrs. R. A. Darwin, Montclair Avenue, was solemnized Sunday, February 8 at 5:30 p.m., at Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue, Rabbi Abramovitz officiating, assisted by Rev. I. Singer, grandfather of the bride. Roses, white irises and lilies decorated the synagogue, the guest pews being marked with bunches of white flowers. The bride, who was given in marriage by her father, wore a princess gown of egg-shell satin, the bodice having long sleeves of rose point lace forming points over the hand, and fashioned with a Medici collar of rose point lace. The long train, inset with the same lace, fell in soft folds from the waist line. Her veil of tulle was held in place by a tri-corn coronet of orange blossoms. She also wore slippers of white satin, and carried a sheaf of lilies. Miss Bertha Darwin, sister of the bridegroom, who attended the bride as maid-of-honor, was gowned in tulle and lace shading from nude to peach color, wearing a peach colored hat and satin slippers to match. The four bridesmaids, Misses Betty Aronson, Irene Wiseman, Eileen Fineberg and Lottie Rubinowitz, were in organdy made in period style, the bodices having square necks and puffed sleeves in pastel shades of pink, blue, mauve, and pale green respectively, wearing organdy hats with feathers and satin slippers in matching tones. They carried nosegays of various flowers. Esther Darwin, niece of the bridegroom, who was flower girl, wore a frock of orchid organdy, the fitted bodice having a sash of taffeta ribbon in the same shade, lace mitts, a picture hat of mauve organdy with gardenia trimming, and carried a basket of rose petals. Joseph Aronson, of Worcester, acted as best man, and the ushers were Saul Hayes, Allan Kirschberg, Ben Cumming George Kirschberg and Jack Darwin. A. O. R. Litwin, N. Caplin and M. Chowney were groomsmen.

Mrs. Litwin, the bride's mother, wore a gown of champagne colored chiffon over flesh color, fashioned with a cocktail jacket of the same shade, and a hat of rose point lace with a plume. Her corsage bouquet was of red roses and lilies of the valley. Mrs. Darwin, the bridegroom's mother, was gowned also in champagne colored chiffon, worn with a cocktail jacket to match trimmed with black fur and a natural colored baku hat caught with a plume. The reception was held at the Mount Royal Hotel, where roses and spring flowers were used in decoration. Later the bride and bridegroom left for New York whence they sailed for Havana, Cuba. The bride travelled in a brown ensemble costume with fitch trimming and a hat, shoes and bag to match.

The out-of-town guests included Mr. Robert Litwin, of Kingston, Mr. Jack Singer of Carbondale, Pa Mrs. J. Baker and Miss Baker, of Watertown, N.Y.; Malcolm Kirschberg of Toronto; J. Einsenstadt, of Ottawa; and Miss K. Baker, of Ogdensburg.

THE AERO RADIATOR

Aero Radiators are the outcome of several years' study and experience in practical heating and in actual fabrication. The Double Radiating Surface of each column has achieved the dual purpose of reducing the Space occupied and the Quantity of Water required.

The Double Concentric Cast Iron Surfaces have insured the maximum results obtainable in Ordinary Radiation Plus the Acceleration of Air Displacement through the action of the Natural Draft due to the Flue Effect of the interior radiating surface.

The consequent increase of the Coefficient of Heat Transmission brings about a marked Acceleration in the circulation of Hot Water Systems, which in turn increases considerably the rate of Heat Absorption at the combustion chamber.

Every effort having been bent toward retaining in the Aero Radiator characteristics in keeping with recognized practice, extreme simplicity of construction has been achieved, with Standard All-Cast-Iron sections, Standard nipple connections, and Standard plain lines in design.

The perfect connections between the one-piece main section casting and the two cast-iron inside tubular parts have proven to be absolutely leak-proof under 200-lb. pressure. Every section undergoes a 200-lb. pressure test before being released to the trade.

The Aero Radiator presents an appearance of unassuming and sturdy elegance which is very appealing and quite symbolical of its incomparable efficiency and economy.

Care has been exercised to avoid undue reduction in the volume of water, in keeping with the policy of retaining substantial ... throughout.

The greater radiating efficiency of the Aero Radiator, as compared with any single surface radiator on the market, has been fully substantiated both by laboratory tests and in an ever increasing number of actual heating systems.

The Aero Radiator is unconditionally guaranteed as to Quality of Material, Workmanship and Radiating Efficiency. Call Marquette 7429. Address is 714 St. James St. W.

A sound Investment Policy

THE soundness of the investment policy of The National Life was never more graphically demonstrated than during the past fifteen months of commercial and financial depression. Over 70% of the Company's investments are in Government and Municipal bonds which have shown a substantial appreciation over their book cost. It is gratifying to be able to state that there is today not a dollar of interest or principal overdue or in arrears on any investment of the Company.

City And District Savings Bank President's Report

The world wide economic crisis which had its inception towards the close of 1929, continued with unabated severity during the whole of the past year.

Although stunned by the suddenness of the stroke, Canada, owing to her eminently healthy financial situation, did not suffer in the same proportion as other countries by the crumbling of the era of mock prosperity which many people made the mistake of considering a permanent condition. History will record the 1929/1930 crisis as one of the major depressions of the post-war period.

Compared with 1927/28/29, business, it is true, shows a pronounced falling off, but it must be remembered that this period of intense overproduction was like the blowing of soap bubbles which only our extreme optimism could clothe with reality. Still, if we consider the average volume of business for the past five years, the comparison is much less unfavorable. Of course quite a number were the victims of flimsy fortunes built on the quicksands of stock gambling and speculation, but we must take into account that, as a sequel to the unfortunate wheat situation, it was only natural that the earnings of many large concerns should show a considerable shrinkage. Everything considered, however, our economic structure has not been shaken by the crisis and our industries have once more shown their strength and that they rest on a solid basis. This is abundant proof that Canada is the land of the future and that we can make no mistake in pledging her our faith with all the resources of our brain and brawn.

You have heard many learned dissertations within the last few months as to the causes of the present depression and the best brains of the financial world are at work to find a remedy for the prevailing evils and particularly the means to prevent their recurrence. Adding to the discussion would serve no good purpose.

But there are many lessons to be drawn from the crisis now happily nearing its end and we would do well to profit by them.

One of these lessons is that there are certain economic laws that are fundamental.

The law of supply and demand is not the least important and the period through which we are passing is convincing evidence that we are ill advised to close our eyes to it.

Next to this is the false economic idea of artificial price-fixing.

The Bank, now in the eighty-fifth year of its existence, is happy to say that it has not suffered from the present world crisis. It notes with pleasure an increase in its deposits, despite the general state of unemployment, and the number of its Depositors is constantly growing.

Moreover, in accordance with its prudent custom, it has further strengthened its position thus assuring the most ample protection to its numerous clients.

The statement presented herewith is absolutely clear and needs no elaboration. The Bank's investments consist of the highest class of bonds which may readily be liquidated, so that the Bank can pay $1.07 for every dollar due to its Depositors. Moreover, these securities appear in its balance sheet at a figure considerably under the current market price.

The premises occupied by the Bank and its branches are its own absolute property, free from all encumbrances, and are carried on its books at less than 50% of their assessed value.

We have further widened our sphere of activity, two new branches having been opened during the year: one at Verdun and the other at the corner of Mount-Royal and DeLorimier avenues.

Although the clouds of adversity have not as yet been dissipated, the dawn of a better day is appearing above the horizon. The stamina of the Canadian people will await it with patience and in the light of a better and more stable era of prosperity the lessons of the period through which we have just passed will not be without profit.

NEW IMPROVED GARMENT MODEL FOR MANUFACTURERS

"La Parfaite" model form 1931 is greatly improved. Made by Delfosse & Cie who employ New York experts only. These models are made in all sizes with choice of three bases including the Pedal Base. They also manufacture the Traveller's rack. Every traveller should carry one of these "Racks". They are very light and still very rigid. They are made of light steel tubing standards and cross bar telescoping in each other. Highly polished and nickel plated, they are strongly constructed, steady, easily handled and can be mounted or dismounted in less than a minute. The rack will hold from [illegible] to [illegible] dresses, [illegible] to 20 costumes, 20 to 25 coats, suits, overcoats or [illegible] garments. It is the ideal Rack for travellers. "Sometimes when people censure me,
I tell them without rancor,
That for what it cost me to be free,
I might have had an anchor."

The Jewish Chronicle, of London, England, the most influential English Jewish publication in the world, and a paper committed to Zionism, asks in its only editorial in a recent issue whether the Zionist Organization can survive. The gist of this long editorial will be given here, in part in verbatim, to illustrate how forthright a Zionist paper can be in honest and anxious criticism of Zionist organization policy.

The Zionist movement, says the Jewish Chronicle, can proceed without the Organization, but with nothing to hope for except continued life. Essential to the strength and well-being of the movement, the work of two generations of Jewish energy, it now appears to be tottering as the result of execrable leadership. Set up to promote and protect Jewish interests, it has given those interests the go-by whenever they have been challenged, choosing the easy paths of compromise with principles and utter negligence of basic claims for the promotion of which the movement was brought into being.

Robust leadership, charges the Jewish Chronicle, would have set itself, as its very first task, to obtain a clear interpretation of the dubious wording of the Balfour Declaration. "Zionist leadership instead, actually gloried in the diverse and antagonistic renderings of which it was capable. It actually wallowed in hoodwinking rhetoric on the theme of 'a National Home for the Jewish People.' A little foresight must have revealed to any leadership worth the name that the Mandate was rendered practically at the mercy of all and any of the enemies of Jewish nationalism by its being enveloped in the Churchill Memorandum, the two documents being promulgated as interdependent. Yet Zionist leadership accepted the Memorandum with profound genuflexions indicating a deep gratitude to the British Government for having kicked over so incontinently the excellent bucket of milk it had but recently yielded".

The editorial pokes fun at the Zionist leadership because, when the appointment of Sir Herbert Samuel as first High Commissioner of Palestine was announced, it hailed him as "Our Samuel", in Yiddish, a man altogether unsuited to the circumstances in which he was placed. When the Arab riots occurred soon after his accession, the Zionist leadership allowed these riots to be ascribed to Jewish failings because such a verdict involved condemnation of "extremists", that is people who expressed dissatisfaction at the manner in which the Organization conducted affairs. Zionist leadership allowed everything to drift, everything except the money which American-Jewish sacrifice was pouring into the Organization treasury. "Nibble nibble, whittle whittle went bit by bit of the Jewish position in Palestine. The diluting influence of the Churchill memorandum, so evident to so many, was discounted by Zionist leadership by phrases such as 'merely evanescent' or 'a mere phase in the movement.'"

Things went on, says the Jewish Chronicle, until signs appeared of the impossibility of continued financial support from American Jewry. Then the Zionist leadership set up the Jewish Agency in the hope of making its sagging money bags bulge again with American wealth. All along the leaders had been warned that it was essential that a good understanding, compatible with Jewish self-respect and in obedience to Zionist principles, should be set up with the Arabs in Palestine. Not a move in that direction of any definite nature was accomplished and it is doubted if any was attempted. And so, if the Arabs were not "pannicked" into the August 1929 massacres by the boasts of the Agency, they at least used them as the excuse for the horrors of Hebron and Safed, charges the editorial.

The Jewish Chronicle claims that Weizmann's resignation after the Passfield White Paper and his almost simultaneous decision to carry on until the Congress, which was to have been immediate and has since been postponed, all shows a contemptuous indifference to public opinion and especially Zionist opinion, a fact which is perhaps at the root of most of the trouble which Zionist leadership has brought to the movement. The postponement of the Congress, claims the editorial, "means that Zionist leadership is ashamed or afraid to meet its supporters and, Micawber-like, is hoping for something to turn up, maybe some American gold out of the [illegible] that is to be [illegible] applied to a country that is producing endless breadqueues of starving out-of-works. . . These surely sufficient to justify the question whether the Zionist Organization can survive and to call for its very close consideration. Only in such is to be found the way of constructive policy."

It is interesting to note that in this entire long article of severe criticism that the London Jewish Chronicle has nothing to suggest except an examination of the question which it puts. It admits: "We are not concerned for the moment to say whether the present Zionist leader should cease even nominally to lead, whether an efficient successor is discoverable or whether, in the present circumstances, any arrangement for leadership that has been suggested has in it the element of feasibility." This Zionist organ has no apology to offer for tearing down without being able to offer help after that. It earns its right to express itself by calling attention chiefly. Its criticism is not the sleep-making, Rotarian, lulling kind which soothes and chloroforms into a false temporary security and which some people so mistakenly admire as being constructive criticism. It is ruthless, it destroys, it hews to the line letting the chips fall where they may. It tears down but it makes room for necessary reconstruction. Therefore it is constructive criticism of the first order.

Historical Sketches

(Suggestions for these sketches will be received gratefully; also any additions or corrections.)

When the Y.M.H.A. of Montreal rented its first house at 54 Ontario Street West at $25 per month it had been in existence for two years and had $15 in the bank. It was started April 8, 1908, by a group of young men meeting in the old Standard Hall at St. Lawrence and St. Catherine Streets and its first president was Marcus Sperber. When the new place was rented the directors assessed themselves $2.00 each, bringing the bank balance up to $40. These directors, who may be called the founders, were M. Goldberg, D. Spector, M. Suskin, W. Singer, C. Schnaer, S. Rawson, S. Goldfield, L. Golland, S. W. Goldstein, and M. Singer. They paid the first month's rent, paid a commission of $5 to the agent, and gave a deposit of $1 on furniture to be bought on time. $1 was left when a committee of citizens met and raised $350 for an athletic and literary program of activities. The first donation was made by ex-Alderman James Robinson, a non-Jew. It was for $100 and made him a life member.

March 10, 1910, the Association was incorporated by charter and the charter members were W. Singer, Solomon Goldfield, S. W. Goldstein, Simon Rawson, Morris Goldberg, Lazarus Golland, Daniel Spector, Charles Schnaer, W. W. Swedler, Max Singer, Abraham Albert, Morris Suskin, H. Gold. The Association moved to 52 Ontario Street West and appointed Charles Lambert honorary physical director. He originated the orchestra. Money was so scarce that the directors themselves had to finance the organization. Then Bernard Rose came to the rescue and collected money from friends for the treasury. The following year the Association had come up in the world enough to pay $55 for rental of premises on St. Charles Borromee Street, now Clarke Street. But down went the money supply and interest of members and the organization was about to disappear when Jacob Goldstein was elected president in 1912. Credit has been given him for the first real foot-hold and growth which the Association gained as a power in the community.

The building at 492 St. Urbain Street, previously occupied by the St. Patrick's Amateur Athletic Association, was obtained and a membership campaign enrolled 1,200 names. A blow to the Association was the condemning of the gymnasium but just the same the basket-ball team worked in the Shamrock A.A.A. gymnasium and won the championship of the Shamrock League. The orchestra progressed under the direction of J. J. Gagnier, who directs it now. Sol Kellert became the patron of the Y. and has given years of unselfish support to it. The annual dance and dramatic play became revenue producing activities.

On May 1st, 1916, new quarters were acquired at 288 Sherbrooke Street West. There was no gymnasium there and basketball continued to be practiced at the Shamrock Gymnasium and classes took place at Montreal High School. January 1, 1917, Alderman Louis Rubenstein, who died recently became president of the Association and his support was valuable in giving it firm basis. In September, 1918, a campaign for funds netted $20,000 which was held until 1920 when it went to the purchase of the Shamrock building at 607 St. Urbain Street. With its increased facilities, business and professional men's classes were organized and the scope of work widened to include the varied interests of a social centre.

In March, 1921, $1,000 was received by the bequest of the late

Lazarus Cohen, father of Lyon Cohen, president of Shaar Hashomayim Synagogue, and himself a learned graduate of Wolozhin Yeshiva in Poland. In 1923 the basketball team, under the captaincy of M. Levitt, won the senior championship of Montreal. As a reward, steps were taken for the building of a new gymnasium to replace the old delapidated wooden one. In October 1923 the new building was ready for use and the Y.M.H.A. entered upon this present modern era; quite a different one from the day the landlord seized the furniture and held it until the directors paid the overdue rent. Different, too, from the period when Cohen, the caretaker, had eleven months' back pay due him.

The first Executive Director, M. H. Weinstein, was engaged in 1923 and the Association began to develop along community centre lines. In 1926 came the announcement of Sir Mortimer B. Davis's gift of a modern home. He died in 1928 before the building could be dedicated. When the ceremonies took place June 24, 1929, the new home was named the Sir Mortimer B. Davis Memorial Building. Rt. Hon. Lord Shaughnessy, K.C., personal friend and associate of Sir Mortimer; Mayor Houde; and Michael Hirsch, Hon. Pres. of the Federation of Jewish Philanthropies, were among those present who paid tribute to the memory of the donor. Lady Davis was there to witness the transfer of the building on Mount Royal Ave. to the Y.M.H.A. Sol Kellert, the late Alderman J. Rubenstein, and Jacob [illegible] were on the Building Committee. A bust of Sir Mortimer was unveiled in the lobby. Horace R. Cohen, Vice President, was in charge of ceremonies. M. Levitt, Secretary, placed in the cornerstone the copper box containing [illegible] and periodicals. The late Mr. Rubenstein laid the cornerstone.

which calls with its gold plated hand the destinies of men today? [illegible] [illegible] when in the preface [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] and [illegible] its decrees". Unbounded [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of democracy and our [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. How can we say that democracy has failed, when [illegible] [illegible] been tried. What we are witnessing today is [illegible] [illegible] of democracy at all, the failure of plutocracy, that [illegible] [illegible] few who are rich over the many who are poor, and as long as wealth is concentrated rather than disseminated, as long as the great masses are [illegible] into factories and slums, [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] the leisure to examine critically the candidates and [illegible] them, [illegible] in party [illegible] and [illegible] of [illegible] [illegible], as long as the vast and unlettered immigrant crowd can be [illegible] into huge majorities [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] in the moneyed might and financial power of the economic [illegible] of our day, just so long will democracy remain [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]. [illegible] [illegible] the closing words of the preface to "The Apple Cart": "until Breakages Limited is broken will democracy be realized on earth."

[illegible] it is not democracy that is doomed to disintegration and decay [illegible] rather that aristocracy of wealth which in our modern world of growing wisdom and spreading enlightenment must ultimately fail. No government founded upon the denial of full freedom and equality can [illegible] survive. Fascism and Sovietism, for example, may serve well as [illegible] expedients necessitated by the exigencies of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] autocracies and dictatorships of the past [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and vanish into the limbo of the forgotten [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] engraved in the hearts of men, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] that men shall be free, that the [illegible] shall be [illegible] from [illegible] dungeon and them that walk in darkness from their [illegible] [illegible]. Democracy, though by no manner of means perfect, is yet the best concept of government yet devised by man and is inestimably superior to any substitutes yet suggested. With all its faults, we must love it still.

Surely the democratic impulse has dominated Jewish destiny. From Moses to Marx the Jewish heart has throbbed with the hope of freedom and equality; from Jeremiah to Spinoza, Israel's dream has been of a humanity released from its thralldom and free to glean the precious bounty of life. From Hillel to Nathan Straus the Jew has believed implicitly in the innate goodness of man, and therefore in his capacity and sufficiency of character to govern himself.

The Jewish answer to the challenge of "The Apple Cart" and to the contemporary and most [illegible] [illegible] toward dictatorship could be given in the words of any of the names just mentioned. It could be gleaned from the writings of a host of other seers and sages, poets and philosophers, [illegible] [illegible] of the anniversary of the birth of that Great Emancipator, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of the Hebrew spirit, perhaps it would not be amiss to say that the [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Moses [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] mighty [illegible] and [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of Israel [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of Abraham Lincoln, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] "government of the people, by the people and for the people shall not perish from the earth."

Northern Ontario now open for settlement is fifty cents per acre, contains millions of acres of the finest agricultural land in the world. Its resources in lumber, minerals, water-power, fish, game and scenery are immense. The land calls for men to cultivate it, and it returns will give wealth, comfort and prosperity.

What settlers say of the soil, climate, farming and forest life, is told in a most attractive booklet issued under the direction of the Honourable Thomas L. Kennedy, Minister of Agriculture for Ontario. Full instructions in regard to securing a title to these rich agricultural lands are also given.

Among Toronto Jewish Women

Mrs. John J. Glass, 292 Heath Street West, says: "The most capable woman of my acquaintance is Mrs. Anna Selick. I was in close personal contact with her for three years and in many respects found her the most outstanding Jewish woman in the communal life of the city. She has most unusual executive ability. Her influence is responsible in a large measure for the tremendous success of Hadassah in this city as well as of the Hadassah organizations throughout the Dominion and of other women's organizations. I only hope that her work will always be appreciated by the Jewish Community because of the fact that she has worked tirelessly with all her heart and soul for well over a decade and when it was necessary for her to earn her own livelihood. I also hope that the work of the Hadassah organizations which she started in Canada will grow from strength to strength and inspire Mrs. Selick with still more years of energy to carry on her noble work. Mrs. Selick inculcated so fine a spirit in Hadassah that she has inspired her whole following to emulate her."

The Enemy's Gates

By Richmond Barrett

By Special Arrangement with Boni and Liveright

Their schedule had been altered, of course. Joseph's summons had automatically canceled the week on the Riviera, the ten days at St. Moritz that were to have wound up their travels. But to Ann's direct questions: "Can we start right off?" "What's the earliest date we can get a steamer back?" "Where do we sail from?" George gave evasive, noncommittal answers. "I've arranged all that; don't worry, dear." His plans were his own; he had no intention of confiding them to her. As a matter of fact, he had no clear idea himself of the more intricate details; but even on the salient points he refused to enlighten her. It was only after dogged insistence that she would drag from him, "Why, we'll go back on a Cunarder," or "We'll be in London just a couple of days maybe three." His tone, polite and wearily patient, would carry the hint that she really could have worked it all out by herself if she'd taken the trouble. On Parker, too, he employed these odd bewildering tactics, snubbed him for his offers of aid, assured him there was no need of getting flurried or excited; but with Parker he was always forced in the end to drop the dictatorial manner and beg by indirections to be guided out of his difficulties. He kept these little consultations from Ann; that she was not in complete ignorance of them he suspected, and it grieved him, such dishonorable knowledge on her part.

"Mother wants us for a while when we get back," she told him one morning in London, looking up from the letter that held the precisely worded invitation in characters of cramped severity. "What do you think?"

She had expected him to shake his head in a panicky protest. The few glimpses he had caught of her mother and father before the wedding had disconcerted and scared him. That he would consent to visit them now struck Ann as fantastically improbable. Indeed, so confident had she been of his attitude that the tone of her question took his refusal as granted. Folding up the letter, she had tossed it aside with an air of finality, stirred her coffee, tasted it, dropped another lump of sugar into it.

He had been silent for a moment, watching her across the breakfast table. Some nerve within him twinged. She didn't want him in her father's house—that was obvious. "Well?" By the abrupt monosyllable, he indicated that he could be persuaded.

Ann, taken aback, had hesitated for a single second. Then, "It doesn't matter to me one way or the other," she told him. She flashed him a level smile. "It's up to you, George."

"I don't see any reason why we shouldn't stop a while with your people. Do you?" The query was casual; but she had seen, all at once the crafty glint in his eyes.

"None whatever," she returned on the same matter-of-fact note.

"All right." He nodded, appearing to thank the parents stiffly in the person of their daughter. "It will be awfully nice, dear, I'm sure."

"Good." She could make her voice sound enthusiastic now. "I'll cable mother to-day."

He drew in a cautious breath. The tiny corkscrew pang in his heart was gone, as if a twisted muscle had suddenly straightened out.

"How long will we have to stay there?" he asked later that same day. Having committed himself to the visit and obtained from Ann an honest approval, he could confess his humorous dread. "Not more than a week?"

"Oh, no," she said. "Just long enough so they'll understand we're not neglecting them."

"I see. Not more than a week." He put the words before her again.

"Not more than a week." She gave them back to him with the gravity of a man handing over a signed contract.

Scrupulously she concealed the fact that the agreement had been forced upon her. Any attempt to explain her misgivings to George would be useless, she knew. He would set down her reluctance to enter her old home again as damaging evidence against the security of her allegiance to him. She could not hope to make him believe that her love was steadfast, less a passion than a ministering pity and a strong solace. She could not convince him that his own love was unsound, that it required ceaseless tending lest it should become a breeding place for diseased rancors.

With every day of their homeward journey, George's secretiveness increased. Directly he arrived at a decision, he would busy himself with covering it up from Ann, like a dog trotting off to the back garden to bury a succulent bone. He had become all at once the man of affairs, the head of a great house. The conviction of his inadequacy was still strong in him. Only a bold face could he bluff the world into taking him seriously. First he must impress his wife with his importance, make her regard him as a power. He therefore used a cryptic [illegible] speech in her presence, cultivated a general air of being so absorbed by matters of consequence that he couldn't hear the thin chirp of her little problems. His old pride in the Morgenthal might had swelled to tidal proportions. He was no longer just an insignificant member of the family. He stood dilated, legs apart, head thrown back, on the top of the hierarchical structure. He had taken on a symbolic character. The name Morgenthal had for decades meant Mark Morgenthal to the public; in the years to come it would mean George Morgenthal, would have no living connotation apart from him. Confronting his exalted position, he sometimes felt an engulfing rush of misery and fright; his vision would narrow down upon himself and he would peer in dismay at that tiny groping figure, would see it, not through the distorting nebula of Morgenthal glamour but naked under the searchlight of truth. To give anyone else a glimpse of the real George Morgenthal would have struck him at present as a breach of faith to his heritage. Henceforth, not even Ann was to look at him stripped of his robes of state.

In the booking offices of steamship lines he tried his hand at his new responsibilities, went through a sort of warming-up exercise for the great bouts of his future. Ann had been grateful to Mark, from the very beginning, for sending Parker on the wedding journey. Her sense of obligation waxed steadily during the weeks of the return; for without Parker, they might never have got back to New York in safety; and without Parker, George might have been forced to lay the blame for a few of his blunders on himself.

On the deck of the steamer, just before New York surged into view, he had abruptly announced, "You're the wife of a Jew now, dear." He had given a gruff chuckle, as at a rather unkind practical joke he had played on her. "You'd best remember that. But then they won't let you forget it, anyhow." He had waved a vague hand towards the horizon, a gesture that, including in its sweep the whole of New York, yet somehow had a special reference to Mr. and Mrs. Carter.

Late on the second night of their visit, Ann, with a dog fast asleep in her arms, stood in contemplative sadness at her sitting-room window. Gramercy Park, behind its iron fence, outside the range of the glaring street lamps, lay like a well-tended aristocratic graveyard under the blanching moonlight. Into the glacial purity of the sky all the scattered clouds had dissolved, as banks of snow melt when they have slipped down the hillside into an arctic sea. The moon itself seemed only a fragment broken from some errant firmamental iceberg, rounded and polished to an opaque milky luster by the imponderable fluid through which it drifted. Ann sighed and hugged her shaggy dog closer as if for warmth. Then, turning abruptly away from the window, she pulled the shade down over the congealing beauty of the world.

George, slumped in a chair before the open fire, was staring at her from under his gloomy eyebrows. She went over to him quietly. Bending down, she put her forehead to his. Pressing her face against the window, she had taken the chill of the glass into her flesh; now she laid her cool touch upon him, to temper the hot fermentation of his brain.

"Don't worry so, dear," she coaxed in a kindly whisper. "Don't work any more to-night."

COMMENTARIES

By Rabbi Harry J. Stern, of Montreal, Associate Contributing Editor

OUR FRIEND — THE Y. M. C. A. SECRETARY

The local Young Men's Christian Association is fortunate in having [illegible] of its executive secretaries, George S. Mooney. He is a man of [illegible] religious idealism and genuine spirit. He represents, in every [illegible], the best in the Christian Youth Movement of the day. Mr. Mooney [illegible], since our arrival in Montreal, more than co-operative and helpful [illegible] to us in our religious fellowship undertakings. The other day we [illegible] the following lines from his pen:

"When is a Jew, a Roman Catholic, or a Protestant, neither Jew, Catholic or Protestant? The answer to such a profound riddle was [illegible] on the occasion of the recent Fellowship Meeting of the Temple [illegible] Brotherhood. And the answer is, that when each separate [illegible] theological tradition becomes aware of its common ancestry and its [illegible] concept of the Fatherhood of God and the Brotherhood of Man, [illegible] such denominational or creedal ideas of difference [illegible] incidental to the great single bond that binds all men, everywhere, [illegible] only source of life, [illegible], God. Such meetings [illegible] and one would like to hope that not only Jewish [illegible] Catholic priests and Protestant ministers [illegible] making available cathedrals and churches, as well as temples [illegible] emphasis of our common heritage, our present fellowship, and [illegible] unity."

ABOUT BOOKS

My desk is littered with new books of Jewish interest. Some of [illegible] ought to be read and re-read.

"Jesus" by Dr. Carl Klein, [illegible] by the Jewish [illegible] Society, should be found in the libraries [illegible] of Jewish [illegible]. [illegible] original work based on [illegible] study of Jewish life [illegible]. [illegible] examples of [illegible] and [illegible] learned by [illegible]. [illegible]

"Hebrew Reborn," by Dr. Shalom Spiegel, presents [illegible] story of what [illegible] the Hebrew [illegible] Palestinian experiment. Dr. Spiegel [illegible] the great and the small things that [illegible] in Palestine [illegible] a Hebrew [illegible] published in Palestine. That and more indicates says Spiegel [illegible] in Palestine is no longer a language of abstraction [illegible] to current needs and experiences [illegible] to sight and hearing, to sense of touch and [illegible] capacity for creation." The author minimizes the movement [illegible] and overemphasizes the magic of the Palestine [illegible].

"Religion in a Changing World" is the title of a new book by [illegible] Abba H. Silver of Cleveland. The volume is made up of [illegible] dealing with religious themes. The style is charming, the [illegible] and the thoughts expressed are logical and philosophical. What [illegible] above all else is the fact that in the midst of such a busy [illegible] Silver finds time to write and to [illegible] it so well. "In our [illegible] world, then, and in every changing world, religion offers the [illegible] thought-pattern — the reality of God, the reality of personality, the reality of truth, beauty and goodness," maintains the author. In [illegible] Science and Religion Rabbi Silver points out that the conflict [illegible] between superstition disguised as religion and materialism disguised as science, between pseudo-science and pseudo-religion." "Religion in a Changing World" will be more than welcomed [illegible] liberal religionists, Jewish as well as Christian.

NATHAN STRAUS' LAST TESTAMENT

I suggest that in every home and in every office of the well-to-do [illegible] Nathan Straus be engraved upon the wall. Every sentence of [illegible] testament preaches a profound sermon. Any thinking and [illegible] will profit by reading it daily and religiously. We are [illegible] in the following statements:

"I have all my life striven whatever I could draw out of business [illegible] to the prevention of poverty and sickness and make no [illegible] bequests in my will."

"It is my wish that none of my children be [illegible] out of the [illegible] good Jews."

Nathan Straus has made a will. [illegible] to make. What [illegible] an [illegible] will — what lessons [illegible] wealth.
